

Michael Bourdeau, MS

Assistant Director of Information Systems
Electronic Health Network
University of Texas Medical Branch

Mr. Bourdeau has more than twenty-five year's professional experience in healthcare information technology, including assistant director of information systems at EHN. In addition to his experience at EHN, he has held senior management positions, such as president or chief operating officer, at information technology and healthcare software vendor and service organizations, and chief information officer for a 4.2 million annual encounter correctional health system. He has many years of experience and success managing staff, budget, corporate and ASP information technology services, and healthcare solutions for medical organizations on the patient, provider, and payer level. He also has extensive expertise in selling, consulting, installing, managing, and servicing turnkey and ASP healthcare solutions in medical communities as well as experience with developing and maintaining telemedicine infrastructure, including telecommunications, equipment, training, and support systems.

Mr. Bourdeau holds a BS (cum laude) in computers from Randolph-Macon College and a MS in computers from Southern Methodist University/University of Texas. He is a member of Phi Beta Kappa.